31 Canadian Brigade Group to Participate in Exercise Arrowhead Guardian

June 7, 2023 – London, Ontario – National Defence / Canadian Armed Forces

In a significant step towards bolstering Canada's military preparedness, the nation's Armed Forces is set to conduct Exercise ARROWHEAD GUARDIAN 23 (AG23) – the largest simulated war fighting reservist exercise in over a decade.

With more than 850 highly trained reservists and over 200 vehicles participating, this exercise is designed to enhance combat readiness and strengthen the capabilities of the Canadian military.

The exercise, spanning from Petawawa to Windsor, will bring together members of the 31 Canadian Brigade Group (CBG), receiving support from 32 CBG and 33 CBG respectively. AG23 will test the Brigade's combat expertise and offer live-fire training and a high-stress, high mark evaluation of operational competencies at its culmination.

The evolving nature of conflicts around the world underscores the importance of maintaining a high level of readiness within the Canadian military. AG23 will simulate the logistical complexities and challenges faced by combat forces in various scenarios, with its intensity increasing as the exercise progresses.

Designed to provide an immersive combat environment, Ex ARROWHEAD GUARDIAN 23 will facilitate the acquisition of core competencies across all military trades and levels of leadership. This initiative is strategically aligned with the Army Reserve's commitment to seamlessly assemble, deploy, sustain, and engage in combat – the cornerstone of successful military operations. AG23 will demonstrate Canada's unwavering commitment to maintaining a strong and agile military force capable of responding to global security challenges.

As the world grapples with ongoing conflicts, the significance of readiness and effective combat capabilities cannot be overstated. Ex ARROWHEAD GUARDIAN 23 signifies Canada's resolute stance in preparing its military personnel to excel in diverse combat scenarios, ensuring that they are well-equipped to contribute effectively to both national and international security efforts.
